

English Faculty Positions

The Zhejiang University/University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign Institute in Haining, China has a limited number of full-time faculty positions (with the possibility of either tenure-track positions or non-tenured teaching faculty positions) to teach first-year composition courses, various English general education courses, and advanced composition, available immediately.

All candidates are required to have a PhD degree in English (or other relevant field), plus teaching experience at the college level. Preference will be given to candidates who demonstrate excellence and leadership in teaching writing at the college level.

The ZJU-UIUC Institute is an engineering college on the new Zhejiang University (ZJU) International Campus in Haining, China, about 120 km southwest of Shanghai. The ZJU-UIUC Institute conducts teaching and research in broad program themes of engineering sciences for human health, engineering sciences for flexible manufacturing, and engineering sciences at the nexus of energy, environment, and sustainable development. Undergraduate and graduate degrees are offered in civil engineering, computer engineering, electrical engineering, and mechanical engineering. Classes and student activities are conducted in English. Many of the Institute's research activities have important humanities aspects, including understanding of social impact and economics, consideration of human interactions, impact on education at all levels, and public outreach.

Responsibilities for faculty members in the English program of the Institute include direct teaching of two class sections per semester, evaluation of written work in advanced classes, mentoring of student reading and writing clubs, development and teaching of English general education courses, carrying out seminars and workshops on technical writing, and participation in research programs of the Institute.

Applications must include an application letter, a complete CV, a statement about teaching interests and plans, a statement about research interests and plans, up to three sample syllabi from prior teaching experiences, and at least three professional references. All requested information must be received for your application to be considered. Please upload your letter, CV, and other documents through the application system found at <http://zjui.illinois.edu>, or send directly to the Institute human resources office at zjuihr@zju.edu.cn.

The search process will continue until positions are filled or through June 30, 2020. Salary is highly competitive with similar positions at other institutions. For more information, please visit <http://zjui.zju.edu.cn> or contact the institute human resources office at zjuihr@zju.edu.cn or +86 (571) 8757 2511.

Zhejiang University and the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign are renowned for their engineering programs and liberal arts colleges, and have a long history of collaboration. The Institute creates a unique student experience of multidisciplinary collaboration, technical leadership, teamwork, and creative excellence. Individuals with diverse backgrounds, experiences, and ideas who embrace and value diversity and inclusivity are encouraged to apply and all qualified applicants will receive consideration without regard to race, national origin, disability, age, or other personal characteristics.