What kinds of projects will scholars complete?

There are many kinds of projects and ways to choose them! Students may complete a variety of remote, community-based projects from campus or from anywhere in the world. Students may identify their own community-based projects, sign up for projects through GivePulse, or be matched with service opportunities through service learning classes, unpaid internships, and fellowships. Examples of projects completed during the past year include:

- Packing and carrying groceries for Channing-Murray Foundation's food pantry delivery efforts
- Conducting literature reviews for Central Illinois Neuropsychological Services
- Writing and creating social media content for community organizations like Unity in Action Magazine

How will the projects be matched?

The Community Learning Lab (CLL) in the School of Social Work works with more than 200 community organizations in Champaign County to fulfill community needs through student projects. The We CU team will collect these projects and match them with classes, student groups, and individual students. Students may also self-identify projects and log their hours as part of We CU.

Join We CU!

The first step toward joining We CU is to attend or view an online information session. We require that all students view the information session before joining We CU because it explains how to register, track hours, and fulfill program requirements. It is also the best way to learn about the variety of opportunities and resources available to participants. Visit wecu.illinois.edu/join-we-cu.
